Thinking About: Final Product

Weekly Report 1/23 to 1/29

This past week, I worked on assessing my original work product and seeing what I have learned from my research from these last months. I believe by organizing my charts and data, I was accurately able to gain an understanding from my survey. I thought it was incredibly beneficial to sit down and take some time to reflect on what I have been working on since October. By having all of my information in one place and writing a report about my product, I know have some idea about my final product...

I know that I want to continue my study into drug abuse, but instead I want to focus on a different targeted audience. For my original work, my focus was on my peers that are teenagers in my community, but after talking with my mentor, I believe I want to focus on a younger audience. By making an educational video about preventing drug abuse at an early age, I can reach out and contact elementary school PTA's and get a wider reach on the Frisco community. I can make a simpler version of national reports and use my own information and use of technology/ iMovie to create a well-organized video to inform elementary school kids.
